Dorothy Dix On the Ethics of Flirting

DR. EMIL REICH has been lambasting American women again in a London paper. He says that they have no "pectoral momentum" and that they know nothing of love or friendship.

The charge that American women are human icicles has been made so long that nobody thinks seriously of refuting it any more. All foreigners enjoy a happy faith in believing in that superstition just as our fancy delights in painting every Italian woman as a languishing-eyed beauty.

Of course, a closer acquaintance discloses the fact that not all Italian ladies are beautiful, nor do they even all have dark eyes, and that the Spanish donnas wear straight fronts and hobble skirts.

Likewise a real investigation into the physiology and psychology of the American women would disclose that in her veins flowed good, warm, red blood instead of ice water, and that she can run as high a temperature and have as great a "pectoral momentum" as any of her sisters of other nationalities when the right man comes along.

She Has Lived Her Love. If Dr. Reich and the other critics of the American woman want to know whether she can love or not, they should take account of the women who have followed their men into the wilderness.

As for flirting, the difference between the American woman and the European is that the American woman does her flirting before marriage, as a usual thing, and the European woman does hers afterwards.

Warren, if one could only help those children—help them to help themselves. "Hush, dear, you mustn't dwell on things like that! If you think of them at all, try to think that there is an eternal justice in all things—and that, some day, sometime, all that now seems hard and cruel will be made right."

Warren had never been given to moralizing, and yet now he often surprised himself in his desire to comfort and reassure her. And her trust and clinging dependence on him now was complete. She took to him all the little perplexities and worries with which she would never have bothered him before.

For diversion Warren took her to a number of concerts and light operas. And as she sat beside him, her hand held close in his, under the program or a fold of her wrap, she let herself drift to the strains of the music about her and to the wonderful song within herself—and knew that life was giving her of its best.

She had long neglected her piano, but now she spent hours playing softly, dreamily, sweet, old-fashioned melodies that she played by ear, while her mind hovered about the wonder of the next few months—and all that they would mean.

Her Keener Sympathies. Even the hand-organ man received an unusual number of pennies. She seemed to find a melody in his grinding airs that she had never noticed before. And, too, there seemed to her a new pathos in the old and withered Italian couple, who day after day pushed by their heavy organ, looking up at the windows for pennies that so rarely came.

Helen's sympathies were keener, and the demands on them more frequent than ever before. She could pass no beggar, no blind or crippled peddler without bestowing their appeal. And Warren, who had always been sturdily opposed to promiscuous alms-giving, now made no protest when she asked him to "Give that poor old man something."

And when he dropped a coin in some trembling, palsied hand, she would press closer against his arm. "Now that we are so happy—it seems so hard to see unhappiness in others. If one could only help them all—in some real way—some way that would give them courage and hope. Oh, there is so much suffering—I seem to see it more now than ever before. What you mustn't, dear, now is the time you mustn't think of such things."

Warren is Kinder. Oh, I know, I know, and yet I can't help it—I feel everything so much more now, president of the Order of Railway Conductors and by them distributed to all executive officers of subordinate unions and locals.

we do the golf fatalities, there is no doubt that before marriage, flirtation is a most healthful and edifying pastime, and where it is recognized as a legitimate sport, it promotes the chances of matrimonial felicity, and of people making a wise selection that they could under other circumstances.

It affords a man an opportunity to get acquainted with a girl before he commits himself. How is the man who never sees a girl except in the bosom of her family, and who never hears her talk anything except the more platitudes of the day, to know what sort of a woman she is, what intelligence she possesses, whether she is the sort of a fascinator that could keep her husband entertained to his dying day or a bore who would send him forth in a week to his club for entertainment?

The man who dances attendance on a girl in what we call a flirtation, and who makes near-love to her, gets a very shrewd idea of her character. He can fathom her vanity and get the measure of her weaknesses and her strength; he can tell by the deftness of her hand and the way she handles her bow she would meet most of the exigencies of life; he can judge by what she'll stand for and what she won't the very fibre of her nature.

I know an extremely hard-headed, rich old man who says that he never goes into any big business deal with a man until he has first played poker with him. By the way the other man plunges or hedges; by the recklessness or caution with which he plays, by the foolish risk he takes, or the chances he lets slip by him; by the very temper he displays when he wins or loses, this old banker sizes him up.

By the same token there are few better ways of getting a line on a woman than a little flirtation with her—playing the love game with her. If she plays fairly and squarely she is all right. If she cheats, she is dishonest, and not to be trusted. If she doesn't know how to play at all, she is a clump, a dead heavy, unimaginative, unromantic creature that will set as solid on your neck as a lead weight.

Woman's Inalienable Right. If men have the privilege of flirtation before marriage, it is woman's inalienable right under a system of idiotic convention that does not allow a woman to openly woo her mate, flirtation is the only path that leads to the altar.

Woman's power in matrimony is only the veto power, and in order to have some collection to select from, and not to have to take any man that asks her, she is obliged to lure as many men into her net as she can. She has got to act as if she was charmed, entranced, hypnotized by every man who comes along, in hopes that the right man will come after awhile.

Flirtation is a woman's chance to test her own emotions, and find out if what she is experiencing is real love or simply delight at having taken a new captive to her bow and spear. Often a woman finds that the man who first thrilled her, falls upon her; that the man whom she thought at first her ideal falls to wear well; that the footsteps that once gave her palpitations superinduce after awhile weariness and boredom.

After Marriage, Dangerous. Her whole happiness in life depends upon finding out this in time, and on the safe side of the altar, a system of able knowledge she can only secure by indulging in a little discreet flirtation.

Without doubt flirtation after marriage is a dangerous and a grievous thing, but before marriage it is just the skirmish before the battle in which each man and woman try out not only each other's sentiments, but their own—and it should be encouraged rather than discouraged.

Warren had never been given to moralizing, and yet now he often surprised himself in his desire to comfort and reassure her. And her trust and clinging dependence on him now was complete. She took to him all the little perplexities and worries with which she would never have bothered him before.

She was no longer afraid of him, she no longer hesitated to ask his advice or help in anything that might comfort her mind. For she felt that it was not only her welfare that was to be considered, but the welfare of something so dear to them both.

Four Leading Labor Questions to Be Submitted to Candidates. New York, N. Y., Sept. 26.—For the first time in the history of railway unions, members and delegates representing 308,000 men of the four great divisions of railway employees in the east have voted unanimously at a meeting held here to take concerted action in national and state politics.

"The proper place for settling questions affecting labor is at the ballot box," said Warren S. Stone of Cleveland, O., grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who added: "This is not a political move at all, as is generally understood but a move to get away from the old lines of partisan politics."

In pursuance to this plan, the meeting voted to send out a series of questions to state and national candidates, particularly to candidates for the legislature and house of representatives asking for a definition of their attitude on the universal adoption of safety appliances and an employers' liability law—where such does not already exist—company pensions for superannuated employees, hours of labor and other matters of kindred interest.

GIRL INJURED BY PONY RUNNING AWAY

Las Cruces Miss Dragged by Foot When Pony Is Frightened.

Las Cruces, N. M., Sept. 26.—Miss Arguerite Ruby is lying at her home suffering from severe injuries caused by a runaway pony. The young woman is about 15 years old, is in the eighth grade of the Las Cruces public schools and rides to and from her home on horseback. Friday afternoon, going home, her pony became frightened on account of several boys riding up from behind and bolted. The saddle girths were loose, allowing the saddle to turn, the girl's foot catching in the stirrups and the pony dragging her for quite a distance before the boys were able to catch up with and stop the animal. The injured girl was taken to her home and physician summoned, who found one shoulder dislocated and severe bruises inflicted on the body. She is resting comfortably and no serious consequences are now feared. Mr. Ruby and family came to Las Cruces from El Paso several months ago and are living on the Nichols ranch just north of town at the turn in the Alameda road.

ELKS DEDICATE A MEMORIAL TABLET

Capt. Beall Makes Address at Unveiling Ceremony Sunday Afternoon.

Marking the unveiling of a marble tablet on which are inscribed the names of the departed brothers of the lodge, impressive ceremonies occurred Sunday afternoon at the Elks' home. The program, commencing at 3:30, embraced considerable ritual work, and also included vocal solos and anthems, a choir being in attendance.

The unveiling of the tablet was performed by Little Barbara Wallace, who pulled the string attached to two American flags, disclosing a large white marble tablet, on which, inscribed in black ink, appear the names of deceased members of the lodge. The marble tablet replaces a wooden one on which were painted the names of the departed members. It is located on the west wall of the lodge room on the second floor.

The address of the afternoon was delivered by Capt. T. J. Beall, who was the first exalted ruler of the lodge, following the installation of the organization in El Paso. His address was highly eulogistic.

The musical program included three selections by the choir, which was composed of Sopranos, Mrs. W. D. Howe, Mrs. Lella T. Moore, alto, Mrs. A. H. Goldstein, Mrs. C. E. Follock; tenors, Henry S. Beach, H. M. MacCallum; basses, R. J. Carson, James A. Dick, Mrs. W. R. Brown, accompanist. Vocal solos included selections by
